About Indera

We love stories such as this one. In 2004, Manuel Romero began working in his family-owned coffee shop Industria Ecuatoriana Romero Apolo (or Indera for short) and after a decade, his passion led him to shift towards a new venture: growing the coffee himself. Finca Indera, bought in 2016, is part of a family business and is an initiative of a young couple both from coffee-growing families who wanted to elevate their inspiration to work with specialty coffee and highlight the attributes of the fertile land around them. In time, they gained the knowledge required to achieve such a dream, and they put it into practice today to produce profiles of excellent quality.

Finca Indera is located in the Chaguarpamba canton in the highlands of Ecuador. Nestled in the mountains at an elevation of 1500 metres. Each harvest they use the help of 15 workers and his young children assist in raking the beans during drying. The Romera family say this farm has “a privileged microclimate”. It sees abundant sunshine throughout the winter mornings with fog coverage through the evenings, has soil so fertile the coffee trees are always fruitful, and the cherries are “of unequalled quality”. The dedication and care that the Romero family put into each step of coffee growing, harvesting, and producing are not only recognised by the consumers who enjoy it. Finca Indera has won multiple awards, including first and second place for their first harvest in 2018 at the “Best of Loja” competition. In 2019, they were awarded second place in “Best of Loja” and eighth place in the “Golden Cup”, and in 2020, they continued their streak with both first and sixth places at the “Best of Loja”, and second and fourth places at the “Golden Cup”. Not bad for a young producer with a beautiful family of helpers.
